章节摘录

Russia's space agency has signed a deal that would make a U. S. millionaire scientist the third tourist to visit the international space station, a spokesman said Wednesday. The scientist, Gregory Olsen, could fly to the space station as early as October, Vyacheslav Davidenko, a spokesman for the Russian agency, said Wednesday.

Olsen, 60-year-old, attended training again in May at a base just outside Moscow for the flight on a Russian-built Soyuz spaceship. He said Wednesday that the contract (合同) had been signed. "I'm feeling great and hopeful that I will launch (fly into space) this fall," Olsen wrote in an e-mail exchange with an Associated Press reporter. "Training has been very intense, but enjoyable." According to Olsen, the crew for his flight has not been officially announced, but he has worked with two other crew members in the Soyuz simulator over the past week. Olsen also said he ran almost every morning. "This training has given me tremendous (powerful) admiration for astronauts who have spent years doing this and know so much more than I." Olsen wrote. His trip, originally scheduled for this April, had been on hold last summer because doctors in Russia found an undisclosed health problem during a physical exam. That ailment (an illness that is not very serious) was never found, but this past May the Russian space program gave Olsen medical clearance. Marshall Cohen, president and co-founder of Olsen's company, said in May that Olsen's U. S. doctors reported that he had no health problems.
