章节摘录

Not only because she deserved better, but most of all, because she was a phenomenon in her time, as she was the first woman to win four Olympic medals during one Olympic Games, albeit only three of them gold , and that feat (three Olympic gold medals in one Olympic Games) had already been performed by two other female swimmers earlier (Bleibtrey in 1920 and Helene Madison in 1932). But Rie Mastenbroek won a fourth, a silver medal, too, and that feat had never before been accomplished. Rie Mastenbroek herself personally never had the idea of being a "forgotten, or undervalued" champion; but contrary to many others of equal fame, she was never very fond of the limelight and thus did not pursue being celebrated. Rie Mastenbroek did not have all easy life. She was born in Rotterdam on 26 February 1919. Rie learned to swim at a very young age and one day, when she was eleven years old, she was invited by two observers to join a swimming club. One of the two observers, a woman, later appeared to be the famous trainer 'Ma' Braun. ' Ma ' Braun was a stern taskmaster, who asked her pupils to give everything they had, including a 'way of life' that was frugal in the extreme. But with these stern methods 'Ma' Braun brought Rie Mastenbroek' s condition and techniques to such a point, that already in 1934 she won three gold medals and one silver medal at the European Championships in Magdenburg, Germany. Rie 's program in Berlin was strenuous. She started on Saturday August 8 and from that day onwards until the very end of the swimming competitions, she had to swim at 1east one race each day. Her first gold medal was gained on August 10th in the 100 meter freestyle, which she won in an Olympic record o{1 minute 5.9 seconds against strong competitors.
