章节摘录

版权页：插图： Peking University's Center for International and Strategic Studies aims to enhance academic and policy research in the fields of world politics, international security, and strategic studies. It provides analyses of China's changing international environment and the international strategies of major powers, publishes and submits policy-relevant and timely research works. CISS aspires to offer intellectual support to China's international strategy formulation, to enrich teaching, and to help the general public understand national and international security and strategic issues from a comprehensive, accurate and rational perspective. CISS issues a variety of publications, including a regular briefing series entitled International Strategic Studies Report, occasional monographs, the annual China International Strategy Review, and its own in-house book series. In the globalizing world, political, economic, military, technological, cultural, religious and social issues increasingly interact and overlap with one another. Problems related to the environment, public health, natural disasters and other non-traditional security issues have become increasingly pressing. CISS shapes its work according to the multi-disciplinary nature of these problems and encourages theoretical and methodological innovation. Founded in 2007 and under the administration of Peking University, CISS is headed by an Executive Council chaired by a vice-president of Peking University and comprised of well-established scholars and experts from various Chinese institutions. CISS research projects and activities are coordinated through an Academic Committee comprised of CISS members. Since its establishment, CISS has published a number of influential monographs, translations and proceedings, many as part of projects sponsored by China's Ministry of Education and the National Social Sciences Research Fund, on subjects like "Forecasting China's International Strategic Environment" and "International Relations Theory and China's Diplomacy." CISS has undertaken various assigned tasks as one of the three "key partners" for the Policy Planning Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In addition, CISS has also worked with the CPC Central Committee's Office for Foreign Affairs, the Ministry of National Defense, the CPC Central Committee's International Department, the PLA National Defense University and the PLA Academy of Military Sciences to provide targeted research, policy advice and personnel training. In 2010, CISS received an award for outstanding research from Peking University's Office of the Humanities and Social Sciences.
