章节摘录

In 1957, the 26-year-old GoodaU journeyed to Kenya to work as a secretary. She also arrangedto meet the famous scientist Louis Leakey, who was so impressed by her enthusiasm that he hiredlier as his assistant. She went with him on many trips to the African jungle and in 1960Leakey sent Goodall to live among chimpanzees in a remote animal preserve, recording theanimals' behavior and interactions. For three months Goodall made little progress. But she says, "I never came close to giving up."Her breakthrough came one day when she saw a male chimpanzee stick a blade of grass into atermite hill, then put the grass in his mouth. Afterward she approached the hill and did thesame. Pulling the grass out, she discovered dozens of termites clinging to it. The discovery thatsome animals use tools - was unknown to most scientists at the time.
